Re: ALERT DROPS

To Whom It May Concern:

As a pharmacist, I am often asked what can be taken, that is "not a drug," to counteract drowsiness? Until recently, I have had little to offer from an over-the-counter perspective because the products available contain caffeine, niacin, sugar, or a decongestant-type stimulant. Unfortunately, these products have the potential to cause harm due to overuse, rebound effect, drug interactions, or they may be contraindicated with certain medical conditions such as diabetes or hypertension. I am, therefore, pleased to recommend "Alert Drops" which is a food extract rather than a caffeine, niacin, sugar, or stimulant-containing product. A couple of drops applied to the tongue triggers a sensory/brain response that interrupts the drowsy feeling. "Alert Drops" is a safe and very effective alternative to combat drowsiness.

Sincerely,

Alice Marlis, Pharm.D
